What's That About?

Readers write or email "What's That About" editor Liz Bradbury with questions about GLBT issues.

Dear WTA, I've heard that circumcision can effect whether a man is less at risk for HIV/AIDS. Is this true? Signed Med Student

Dear Med, Yes, it's very true. A new study in South Africa has found that circumcision reduces men's risk of H.I.V. infection by more than 65 percent. If the results are confirmed by two similar studies in progress, circumcision may offer a way to curb the AIDS explosion in some of the most affected nations.

The study, by French and South African researchers, recruited young men who were HIV-negative and uncircumcised, as are most men in South Africa. Half were randomly assigned to be circumcised. After adjustment for other factors, circumcision reduced the risk of HIV infection by two-thirds during the 21 months of the study. The difference was so great that the trial was stopped and the other men were immediately offered circumcision. Two similar studies with very different groups of people are under way in Uganda and Kenya. It may take two years to get results.

The most likely theory about why circumcision works is that the penis's foreskin has cells that are particularly receptive to the AIDS virus. The studies are looking at only whether circumcision protects men from infection. Circumcised men may also be less likely to transmit the virus, but the current studies are not examining that. Even if circumcision doesn't make a man less contagious, it helps protect everyone by lowering the infection rate.

RAGS TO RICHES TAKE THE FIRST STEP

by Denise McKelvey

Dear Denise, My partner and I expect to move in together. This isn't your typical U-haul type of deal. We are facing a few challenges. Which home should we live in? What roles should each of us play in running the household? I love my grandmother's wagon-wheel coffee table and he obviously, does not. Any advice for our joint venture? Signed, In Emotional Bliss

Dear Emotional Bliss, One topic that partners often overlook in their new adventure is money. No matter how optimistic you are about your new arrangement, it's important for both you and your partner to protect your finances in case things just don't work out. The same would be true in a straight couple's new relationship. Consider committing yourself to these five rules.

Rule #1: Talk about money -- Communication about money matters needs to be an open discussion when you're planning a merger. Make a date to specifically discuss your finances. You should share your attitudes toward money, your financial priorities, your spending and saving habits, and your short- and long-term goals.

Rule #2: Keep your finances separate -- When it comes to controlling your personal finances, you should hold the reins. Do not consider commingling your debt or apply for a joint credit card - one bad move by your partner, could damage your credit report. Be reluctant about combining your bank or investment accounts. In case of a breakup, you could end up in a costly legal battle over the assets. Or, even worse, your boyfriend could clean out your account and hit the road, leaving you with a broken heart, a mountain of bills, and little to pay them with. FYI, the state of New Jersey does provide significant protections to same sex partners who jointly own their home and decide to sell it.

Rule #3: Put your arrangement in writing -- This little piece of paper can help keep your trial of domestic bliss from becoming a nightmare. Detail how much each partner will pay for what expenses and when. The documents proclaim to you, your partner, your family, your community and the legal system that, though you cannot legally marry in PA, your relationship is important and valid enough that you're willing to put it in writing. When you are ready, remember nonresidents can get a VT or CT Civil Union, or marry in Canada, or you can marry in Massachusetts (if you live there). Though these won't give you rights in PA, they will document your commitment to each other and give you rights if you choose to live in these places at a later date.

Rule #4: Keep major purchases separate and documented -- Because you don't have the same legal protections as married couples in case of a split, it's smart to keep track of who paid what toward a major purchase.

Rule #5: Be smart about housing -- Don't even think about buying a home together unless you're both certain you're ready to make a long-term commitment to each other - and to homeownership. Generally, you need to own a home three to five years to recoup the costs of buying. Consult a real estate attorney to help you work out the legalities and a fair selling agreement in case of a breakup. Consider renting out your old pad, rather than selling it-at least initially, until you are sure you can stand your partner's quirks in such close quarters.

PRIDE JOURNEY

Here we are again in June, our merry band together in groups large and small around the nation and the world. I'm writing this column the week of the big Senate debate...you know, the one about whether we are, as John Stewart so eloquently put it on The Daily Show the other night, "part of the human condition or just a random fetish..." We always relish these celebrations, the chance to flex our pride muscles. But I think it's important that we rejoice, too, in the simplicity of our daily lives, especially this year.

It's been a long, strange trip to the rejoicing, of course. One night, back in 1992, I learned a great lesson about growing up queer. I was visiting my parents' home from California. My father was very ill and as he slept fitfully upstairs, I watched TV, finding a Comedy Central special featuring six comedians, all gay or lesbian. I had put my first relationship with a political activist to bed, so to speak (learning the hard way to own my point of view), had started to embrace my identity, even understand why it had taken so long to get there. Watching and laughing alone in the dark that night, though, I almost ran to lock the door, suddenly self-conscious and embarrassed! I'd never seen this before. I was so new to the life I didn't even get all the jokes. Soon, I would understand my reaction. I'd been living in a society where I was culturally invisible. If an image of myself was there, it was typically a negative one, a side of "the Life" meant to demean it, make me feel bad about being queer. No wonder it was so hard for us to come out! I couldn't recognize myself in the world. It didn't take much to conclude that I did not belong. How important would that turn out to be? What would I do to belong? Not be a lesbian?

Once a teacher assigned me a scene in acting class. "Martha" in The Children's Hour. I was terrified the whole time that I'd been typecast. I'd seen the movie and felt sad, not getting until years later why the portrayal bothered so many of us, the same way we flinched when Basic Instincts premiered. It's still an obstacle, oftentimes, finding queer characters in our culture who thrive in the world. As much as Brokeback made its impact, Jack's demise seems a throwback to tragic characters and desperation. Or is it? The film is too rich in detail to be so easily dismissed but the question lingers.

Television has helped us catch up. Will & Grace was a refreshing change, even if the jokes grew stale sometimes. Rosie's on The View. Ellen is America's sweetheart again. We're all over Showtime and Bravo and LOGO, of course. We ARE making cultural progress, no longer invisible. And, praise the Goddess, no longer solely tragic.

So, I'm proud, focused. I remember our history, what we need to do to be represented, to be heard. And, I know I am blessed every June to belong here, with all of you. See you at Pride!

FINDING A FRIENDLY SCHOOL

By Elizabeth Goff

When children go off to school for the first time, it is an anxious and exciting time for everyone. But gay and lesbian parents experience an additional layer of angst, beyond the usual separation anxiety. We have raised our children to be proud of our families, but we worry about how the teachers, parents and other children will react. We worry that our child may be given negative messages, be made fun of, ostracized or bullied for being different. Sometimes even the most confident "out" parents find themselves revisiting the question of how "out" to be. We try to be optimistic that most people will be decent and accepting. It's hard during times like these, when legislators are trying to formalize prejudice against us into law.

I am immeasurably grateful that I have found a safe harbor from these worries for my two daughters and their two moms. My daughters are finishing their second year at United Friends School in Quakertown. The philosophy of this school is firmly grounded in the Quaker principles of equality, integrity, peace and community. Quakers have a long history of being on the forefront of movements for social justice -- be it suffragists, the underground railroad and antislavery movement, prison reform, or marriage for same-sex couples.

When I was in my decision process and went to look at UFS, I explained our family structure to the principal; and asked if he thought we would be comfortable. Without hesitation, he said that not only would we be welcomed but that we would be valued and our presence would enrich the community. Our experience has been uniformly true to this statement.

No school can promise there will never be an inappropriate comment between students. Children are at various developmental levels, and are actively learning about the world and how to be with others. At some schools, if a hurtful or ignorant comment is made, a teacher might ignore it or think that the recipient of the comment needs to "learn to deal with it". But at this school, understanding and embracing diversity is part of the curriculum. Such a comment is seen as a teachable moment, an opportunity worth interrupting the current academic lesson. UFS is a school filled with academic challenge, but the teachers also know that all

REPORT FROM ROBERT ROUSH

IN CENTRAL PA, EARLIER THIS SPRING:

"Gay" has been a big subject here leading to the Day of Silence that the Danville High School anti-discrimination group observed the second year in a row. 99% of all press coverage is negative toward the event and the group. The Bible banging is REALLY wild in these parts around this sort of thing. The counter (anti-gay) event "Day of Truth" actually gets radio PSA's, etc. in this area (of course they won't give DOS the same coverage-only negative). BUT press is press, baby. One of the most powerful things the pro-gay group in Danville does is say, "See, look at all this anti-gay reaction. It's obvious why we need to do this."

Steve (Olofson) and I sang at the event they had for participants afterward. Some seemed really mesmerized to see a gay male couple together 17 years. A lot of the kids actually listened and talked to us afterward! Even after a whole day of not talking and wanting to tell each other their stories of the day. It was awesome.

The most incredible thing was that we were asked to sing by the cafe owner who held the event at his restaurant. He is a very straight (but extremely liberal Unitarian) person. This is THE FIRST TIME I ever was asked to come and meet gay youth with no feeling of reticence coming from straight people for the youth. In fact, there was a note of desperation that a couple like us needed to be there. Again, it was kind of awesome.

7 LATEST ON THE STATE CONS. AMENDMENT

The PA State House has voted to pass the PA Constitutional Amendment that would prohibit same-sex marriage, civil union and any other legal recognition of same-sex relationships in the state. The next step was for the amendment to go to the State Senate.

But this just in: The State Senate judicial committee changed the language of the bill and voted to send it on to the Senate for a vote. They left the anti-marriage part but they removed the part that prohibited Civil Unions and other recognitions.

This change does not mean that we would automatically get Civil Union, only that Civil Union would not be prohibited by the Constitution. Civil Union is already prohibited by the state DOMA law, but laws are easier to change than the Constitution. It is also possible that this language change could delay passage of the amendment for a long enough time to push the entire process back.

RANTS & RAVES By STEPHEN T. LIBBY

RECENT HISTORY GLBT PRIMER

A lot has passed in order for us to celebrate our pride. Working on the Diamondz Nightclub/Gaydar Magazine float has been a reminder of just how far we have come and also how much work is left to be done. The national theme for Pride month is The Fight for Love and Life. Without going back to the days of Alexander (will anyone be able to utter his name without thinking of that horrid movie?) let's celebrate the 1950's and the Mattachine Society and Harry Hay. While Doris Day was singing of her Secret Love (probably not Rock Hudson) these peaceful demonstrators were demanding "equal civil rights for homosexuals". After years of being targeted for indecency, in 1969, the patrons of the NYC Stonewall Inn fought back. These riots saw gays, lesbians and drag queens using parking meters as battering rams to fight the police.

In 1972 the Diagnostic Statistical Manual finally removed homosexuality as a mental illness. Also in 1972 Jeanne Manford marched in a gay pride parade with her son and PFLAG was born. In 1978 the first openly gay man elected to any substantial political office, San Franciscan Harvey Milk, was assassinated. Also in the 70's, former beauty queen, orange juice pitchwoman and homophobe Anita Bryant ended up with (fruit) pie on her face.

The 1980's put a halt to the decadence of the Studio 54 era. AIDS would strike a devastating blow to the gay community. The Commander in Chief (Ronnie R for those too young to remember) wouldn't utter the word until the latter half of his presidency. The Religious Right called it God's retribution against homosexuality. Hence, Larry Kramer, ACT UP and the Gay Men's Health Crisis took it upon themselves to educate gays and the larger population to the origins of the virus and methods to protect ourselves.

The 90's could only get better. Newly elected President Clinton made us a priority but caved under pressure to Don't Ask, Don't Tell in the military. Martina Navratilova, Melissa Etheridge, Georg Michael (not so voluntary), Elton John, Ellen DeGeneres, k.d. Lang, Barney Frank, Lily Tomlin, Rosie O'Donnell and other notables came out. Jodie Foster, John Travolta, Tom Cruise (thank God) and Michael Jackson (ditto) staid in.

The millennium brought Vermont civil unions, Massachusetts same-sex marriage, many more openly gay politicians and advocates for the gay cause (which is really for the good of all), Will & Grace won a best comedy Emmy, Brokeback Mountain was nominated for a best picture Oscar & Ellen is second only to Oprah (when is O coming out?) in daytime talk.

Use this primer as you see fit... to google some of these names and educate yourself further as to the history of the GLBT movement and to spark a fire under your knickers or pantaloons so you may join in the fight for a brighter future for all GLBT peoples.

Either way please remember these famous words spoken by Oscar Wilde on his death bed- "It would be fitting if Tom Cruise only sired homosexual offspring." Okay, he didn't say that, but he would have. He was a rascal. Happy Pride.

FATHERS' DAY

Father's Day is Sunday June 18. It's a very special day in our house as our son Lucas has two fathers. As in the last two years, we will probably each receive cards from each other, the grandparents and others, all on Lucas's behalf. The moral support helps now that we have entered the terrible twos with Lucas. Also, it will make up for not getting anything on Mother's Day, although some of our friends were wondering which one of us got to celebrate that holiday. Neither of us did, because neither of us wants to be known as the ugliest mother on the block.

Although Mother's Day does not get much publicity in our house, the concept of a mother is not non-existent to our son. Lucas's birth mother has a very special place in our hearts and we keep a picture of Lucas held by his birth mother, with us at her side, in his bedroom. When he fully understands, he will learn the story of how he came to have two dads, and that he does have a mother like every other child. It is important that Lucas knows that although his family represents the growing diversity among new families, Lucas is also just a normal child like any other. Lucas also has plenty of mother figures in his life. He has three godmothers who treat him as though he was their own. And having two fathers, and two godfathers, Lucas has more than his share of father figures in his life as well.

Lucas had the "opportunity" to see each of his dads in drag at the MCCLV drag show this year. Although he wasn't traumatized by the transformation, he wasn't too pleased either; thus, our conclusion that we were not the raving beauties we fancied ourselves.

Lucas appears content to have two dads. We each have something different to offer him just like a mom and dad do. One of us handles the nurturing very well and one of us handles discipline very well. Lucas knows which one is which, and when he doesn't get what he wants from Dad he tries to work some magic on Daddy. Sometimes his magic is pretty powerful and the dads end up having some lengthy child raising debates on everything from the ideal number of hours we can watch "Elmo Visits the Firehouse" to whether an extra fruit rollup really does take the place of green beans. It's obvious we are stressed, but we love it. Why not? What gay man doesn't love some drama, and when there isn't any, you make some. Speaking of drama, on Father's Day we both get to be the stars.

SCOTT SAYS

PRIDE IN THE HOOD

Hello Chipmunk Readers,

I thought I was busy when I lived in the Lehigh Valley with the parade and festival in the park. New York's five boroughs are host to four Gay Pride festival/parades this year. Yes, June is a busy month to be gay in Gotham. Many Lehigh, Northampton and Berks County folks have taken a bus into Manhattan for the big one on the last Sunday in June. What people may not know is that for twenty-two years a Mermaid Parade has lived up Coney Island's Boardwalk the day before the Manhattan Pride Parade. This year the Mermaid parade is scheduled for Saturday June 24. The website from last year shows a nice sized parade led by King Neptune and Queen Mermaid followed by assorted sea creatures and free spirits. I've been meaning to visit the Outer Boroughs anyway so I decided to go into Brooklyn on a gay reconnaissance mission and see if could find the boardwalk without getting lost.

I took the number 2 line all the way to Fulton Street in the financial district and walked across the Brooklyn Bridge. (I watch Carrie Bradshaw do this with her friends seven nights a week and so I wanted to do it too.) I made one stop at Wessel + O'Connor Fine Art, an art gallery located in the Dumbo section of Brooklyn. Some of New York's neighborhood names are actually acronyms. Dumbo is short for "Down Under the Manhattan Bridge Overpass." The gallery is quite close to the bridge on Front Street. The building, a renovated warehouse, is occupied on the second floor with art galleries and spaces for artists to work. On the day of my visit, it was the last day of a Herb Ritts photographic installation. The gallery deals almost exclusively with photography. Some exceptions are made; they held a very successful exhibition of some of Jean Cocteau's drawings. From June 14 through July 28 an exhibit by the Western Photography Guild will be presented, well worth a trip into Kings County.

I got back on the subway and forty-five minutes later I came to the end of the line at Coney Island. I could see the giant Wonder Wheel in the distance. Coney Island is fun to visit. My grandmother visited when she was a little girl. She used to tell me stories about some family member of ours, a retired Russian Cossack. Families could rent ponies 90 years ago at Coney Island and he would rent one for the afternoon. She watched him do circus-type tricks with the pony on the beach. I did not see any ponies, but I did see and eat one of Nathan's Hot Dogs.

As I sat on the boardwalk and watched the seagulls riding the ocean breeze, the Queen Mary II passed by and set out to sea. I thought it was about time another queen should be leaving and I got the Q train back to the city. When the Mermaid Parade comes around on the 24th, I will be ready.

No matter what borough/town you find yourself in, Happy Pride Everybody!

A reminder that PA-GALA and PA Diversity Network are two different organizations.

PA-GALA - Pennsylvania Gay and Lesbian Alliance fights for your rights nationally, in Harrisburg and at the grassroots level. Steve Black of PA-GALA sends out legislative alerts and information to help our community fight things like the State Anti Marriage Amendment. Steve and PA-GALA have been mailing the VGP as a perk to its members for 8 years and will do so for all PA-GALA members who paid their dues for 2006 in 2005 for the rest of this year. PA-GALA will not be mailing the VGP to its members after this year. But you should still support PA-GALA by paying PA-GALA dues ($25, $35) because PA-GALA is the largest and most active grassroots lobbying organization in PA and it costs the organization quite a bit to do all it does for us.

PA Diversity Network produces the Valley Gay Press, runs the GLBT Infoline, runs the PDN Resource Web Site, supports other GLBTA organizations, advocates for GLBT people's rights on a case by case basis, and presents workshops on GLBT issues. Currently we are doing several community events as well, and producing the 100 couples photo project: facing inequality. We are also working with PFLAG on their Berks library grant and working to fulfill our Berks grant. The PDN dues, which bring you the VGP are $15, $20.

We hope everyone supports PDN, PA-GALA and all the other GLBT service groups in the community.

MY COMMENTS AT THE HUMAN RIGHTS CAMPAIGN PRESENTATION

It's Pride month and I'm proud to live in Allentown, the only place in the Lehigh Valley that has a Human Relations Commission and an anti-discrimination ordinance that includes sexual orientation and gender identity. We fought for its passage, fought off a referendum effort and a law suit. And our law still stands to protect Allentown workers and citizens.

I'm proud to live in a district - this district right here, where we are now... where our State Representative (Jennifer Mann) voted No to the hateful State Constitutional Amendment that seeks to deny my family legal recognition forever. It passed anyway through the House and right now is being considered by the State Senate.

The organization I direct, PA Diversity Network is working to put faces to the danger of this amendment. Our Photo Project: 100 local same-sex couples: Facing Inequality has its first public showing this Thursday at Theatre Outlet. I hope you can all attend.

One of the participants in the project said that his State Representative told him that Pennsylvania is a good place for Senior Citizens and Health Care...but that it would probably be better for gay people to just leave the state. The young man replied: I'm physical therapist for seniors-- if I leave the state -- who will provide healthcare for my patients? At the time our photo project had 87 couples's pictures... among them, there were no less than 42 healthcare professionals. Including 7 Registered Nurses, 4 hospice workers, 2 pharmacists, an MRI operator, many practical nurses and 3 physicians. Yet Pennsylvania, which is faced with rampant brain drain and a constant exodus by the professional and creative class, is pushing an amendment that will accelerate the loss of the very people Harrisburg should be seeking to attract.

I hope all the leaders and elected officials here will speak out strongly about this, and encourage the State Senators in the Lehigh Valley, especially those of your own party, to vote NO on this terrible amendment.

Meanwhile, the business community could do their part. Major employers, like Lehigh Valley Hospital and Saint Luke's Hospital and innovative businesses like PPL and Air Products should be leaders in providing domestic partner benefits to their employees. But they still resist and they lose or fail to attract excellent employees because of it. Domestic partnership benefits do not cost a business more money, but they still resist. Perhaps soon, I will be able to be proud of our major local employers for their fairness and leadership. Until then, I can only hope.

***There's one more thing I'd like to add that I didn't say at the HRC presentation.***

You absolutely have no obligation to forgive or tolerate those who support this constitutional amendment. The line in the sand has been drawn by the introducers and backers of this hateful and discriminatory act, who see nothing wrong with using human beings for political gain, or think it is reasonable to base discrimination on the idea that somehow their families are better than our families. We would never try to take their right to protect their families away, but that is what they are trying to do to us.

Be out, be public and be earnest about this amendment and how negative and painful it is, so that everyone you know, knows where you stand. There is no excuse for supporting discrimination against a minority group, it is wrong, it is shameful. While no one should be intentionally rude and certainly should not be violent toward anyone, remind yourself that those who continue to back this terrible amendment are not worthy of your respect. You can change the minds of many people but if you have explained to a person what this amendment would do, and they still back it, they are not your friend.

YES, LET'S GET PERSONAL

Sociologists point out that relationships are revealed socially to the extent that they are legitimate and marriage is the most socially visible of relationships. "Relationships" not considered to be legitimate are more likely to be concealed by partners or ignored by employers, friends and family. However, the constant barrage of conservative rhetoric is intended to create a sense of shame and social isolation in gay men and lesbians. They don't want us to exist so they employ every device to insure our invisibility.

The greatest weapon we have against conservative America is the fact that we have the same capacities as heterosexual men and women for being in long term committed relationships and for parenting and overall professional success. When heterosexuals personally know a gay man or lesbian or have personal contact with a same-sex family, they are more likely to support our rights. This is what scares conservative America - the fact that we are simply "a lot like them" - God forbid!

So it is important that we personalize the debate that is going on in our State and in the Nation with regard to same-sex marriage. Because, whether or not you personally want to get married, the procurement of same-sex marriage rights is essential to the full entitlement of our civil rights. Many in our community are already party to the process of putting a human face on the need for a full complement of civil rights for GLBT people.

These include: Members of our community who participate in groups like GLOW @ PPL, GLISN @ Dunn & Bradstreet, GLEE @ Air Products, GALEA @ Wachovia and Equal @ Agere are a constant reminder that gay men and lesbians are integral to the success of these major companies. The GLBT youth who openly participate in Gay Straight Alliances, model a courageous and forward sense of being, for other youth. The Rainbow Families participate in fun events in the community at large. They are "out there" mingling with non-GLBT families, and demonstrating that our families side by side with theirs, aren't really that different.

Also working continuously: The Members of the Metropolitan Community Church who annually organize and all who participate in the Freedom to Marry Day Courthouse Event, where same-sex couple apply for marriage licenses. PA-GALA members who openly lobby legislators and public officials on behalf of our community. PA Diversity Network which challenges businesses and professional service providers to accommodate the unique needs of our GLBT families.

There are many more of you out there of course, and each and everyone who is "out" to any non GLBT person is participating in this action. Every little bit helps.

Finally, PA Diversity Network's Photo Project: 100 Couples Facing Inequality is one example of personalizing the debate by Committed same-sex couples coming forward to put a face on our community. This project is extremely public and very emotionally powerful. If you are a committed couple consider taking this opportunity to participate in showing Pennsylvania residents we are not invisible.

QUOTE #1

"This amendment is discriminatory, a waste of taxpayer time and money, and bad for Pennsylvania's economy...The more people learn about this amendment, the less they like it, which is why it has been rushed throughout the process," -- State Representative Dan Frankel on the PA State Constitutional Amendment that prohibits recognition of same-sex families

QUOTE #2

"...NOT because so many of us hold marriage as something that we want so badly (although many of us are in real positions of needing those rights when it comes to our real lives with our partners)...but because we need to teach our children and society at large that EVERYONE deserves EQUAL treatment and that EVERYONE deserves to have the same CHOICES as everyone else. If we DON'T have the same CHOICES and if we DON'T have the same rights, we are continuing to spread a message that some people are not as valuable as others and therefore we can beat them and throw them to the curb as was done to Kevin." -- Ari Gold on why we need to be out and the hate crime against Kevin Aviance.

QUOTE #3

"It is a real threat to millions of Americans when the Republican leadership stands on the Senate floor and gives license to treat gay and lesbian Americans as second-class citizens." -- Human Rights Campaign President Joe Solmonese on the Republican justification for the Federal Marriage Amendment

QUOTE #4

"There was a time, during my parent's generation, that in certain parts of the country the prevailing Christian opinion was that blacks and whites shouldn't legally marry. In fact, it would take activist judges on the Supreme Court in 1967 to overturn a law in Virginia, which had made interracial marriage a crime... And there was a time, during my grandparent's generation, that in certain parts of this country, including the great state of Pennsylvania that the prevailing Christian opinion was that Catholics and Lutherans didn't marry! Thank God my grandparents went against the prevailing cultural opinion to marry so that one day I would be born..." I was surprised by the clapping which followed my remarks." - Rev. Karla Fleshman, Imago Dei MCC, Glen Mills, PA who spoke out at a senior citizen breakfast against a State Rep touting the State Marriage Amendment

VALLEY GAY PRESS BOOK REVIEW

"The Complete Saki," Penguin Books $12.95

For a perfect summer read try picking up an old favorite... this collection of the work of Saki (real name: Hector Hugh Munro) includes over 130 short stories, three novels and three plays and sports an introduction by Noel Coward. Through written 100 years ago, this vast body of work is amazingly fresh and contemporary. Many of the stories are under four pages long, but they manage to paint amusing pictures of the privileged class as seen through the eyes of an obviously gay, brilliant and somewhat bored young man who uses a sharp knife to pry up the upper crust and expose what's beneath. Sample the stories - his work is available on line - <http://arthurwendover.com/arthur/munro> - then buy the book to take to the beach.

PA Diversity Network's Photo Project of 100 same-sex couples continues. The project now includes 92 photographs of local couples and they look great.

To be part of this project you and your same-sex partner must be a "committed couple" and must be out and willing to have your picture with your names on it viewed by many people. You must live in or have lived in Pennsylvania. There will be many exhibitions of this project and there will be a poster.

Tuesday June 20, 6-9pm - PDN (Pennsylvania Diversity Network) Photo Project: Facing Inequality - 100 same-sex couples will be featured in an exhibit supporting diversity in Pennsylvania. On Tuesday night, Fountainhead Books, 641 Penn Ave, West Reading will sponsor a photo-taking event where same-sex couples from Berks County can come to have their photo taken for the project! Refreshments will be served and both Earth Rhythms and Fountainhead will be open during the event.
